

To the Recruitment team,

I learned about this position through the internet and I immediately knew I had to apply because of the fact that I have spent the past three years as an iOS Developer and an Apple enthusiast. This position uses all the experience I have gained working at my previous organisations and also is challenging enough for me to gain more skills out of it.

My experience with the full range of apple devices including iOS and MAC OS would be very helpful in succeeding at a challenging role. In addition to this my past experience with trouble shooting, and talking to customers about their feedback, and educating them about their products would definitely be of use here.

My Background summary includes:

- Working at a startup Revv, where I developed an iOS application and spoke to customers about their feedback and educated them on products and services as well to improve the quality of service which we provide.
- I had the reputation as the 'go-to' guy whenever someone had to install MS Office, Xcode and other softwares on Mac or trouble shoot in general.

With professional experience with Apple products and a knack for working in team and with customers I believe I can do well as a customer specialist at Apple.

Thanking you
